

NOTES from the DEPARTMENT

FARMLAND PRESERVATION: A LASTING LEGACY

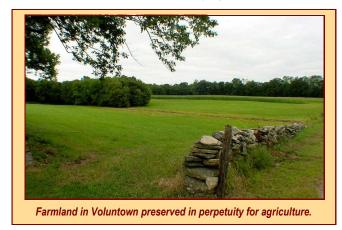

By Steven K. Reviczky, Commissioner

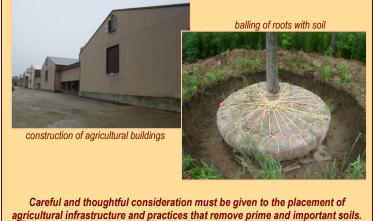

Connecticut's Farmland Preservation Program has made significant and lasting impact on the working landscape of our state. Since 1978, the Department of Agriculture has been at the forefront of protecting farmland in perpetuity, keeping it available for agricultural production today and forever.

Permanently protecting prime and important farmland soils and the agricultural utility of the land is essential and creates the cornerstones of Connecticut's effort to maintain its ability to grow food and fiber. In fact, Connecticut's investment in farmland preservation is an investment in soil—the best of the best farmland soils.

Agriculture will always be challenged with competing uses for limited land resources. Sometimes those challenges come from within. As with infrastructure and impervious surfaces, careful and thoughtful consideration must be given to agricultural practices that remove soil and are unsustainable over time.

These issues first came to light in the earliest moments of the state's efforts to protect its vanishing farmland. Soon after the purchase of development rights to one of the first farms in the program, the new owner built a range of agricultural buildings over significant portions of the protected farm, destroying some of its best soils.

The state legislature and administration responded by halting the program until it enacted laws that clearly and definitively require the protection of the soil.

The overriding question is whether Connecticut will live up to its stewardship obligations in the long run.

Over three decades, the farmland preservation program has evolved into a program on which Connecticut's farm families and citizens can rely. For farmers and owners of farmland, the program is a meaningful alternative to the sale and conversion of quality farmland to non-agricultural uses. The program is a real option on which they can make business and family decisions: acquiring the neighboring farm, expanding or transforming operations, and/or transitioning the farm to the next generation or a new farmer. All taxpayers can be assured that their investment in these farms will result in the protection of Connecticut's prime and important soil resources, keeping these farms available for agricultural production forever.

The Farmland Preservation Program is blessed with strong support from elected leaders, consistent funding, dedicated professional staff, and spirited advocacy from key stakeholders who have come together through the Working Lands Alliance.

The General Assembly's Program Review and Investigations Committee is currently conducting a review of the Purchase of Development Rights Program. As in the past, the committee is looking at the inner workings of the program, how it carries out its business functions, and how it all matches up with the law. While a commitment of staff and resources, this is a welcome review.

As Connecticut closes in on its 300th protected farm and 40,000 preserved acres, it is time to celebrate all that has been accomplished. The program has permanently protected farms in every region of the state, built a number of wonderful protected farm clusters—each over 1,000 acres—and made a real difference on the ground.

As important, consider the lasting legacy that farmland protection has produced in terms of maintaining our working landscapes, adding to the quality of life we cherish, and contributing to the viability of Connecticut's family farms.

Farmland in Lebanon preserved in perpetuity for agriculture.

2012 FARM-TO-CHEF WEEK A BIG SUCCESS

The third annual Farm-to-Chef Week, an initiative of the Connecticut Department of Agriculture, ran September 16-22, 2012. Sixty-five locations participated, including restaurants, farmers' markets, healthcare facilities, K-12 schools, and colleges and universities. To date, 41 of those locations have submitted their reports:

- The 41 locations reporting thus far served a total of 46,379 Farm-to-Chef menu items.
- Each of those menu items featured one or more Connecticut Grown ingredients.
- The value of Connecticut Grown products used in those menu items totaled $53,809.

Farm-to-Chef Week increases awareness among diners of Connecticut agriculture and farm products, and it supports the farmers who grow and raise those products. Thanks to everyone who participated this year, and to the 2012 Farm-to-Chef Week sponsors.

COMMISSIONER REVICZKY TO SPEAK AT OCT 27 FOOD CONFERENCE

Agriculture Commissioner Steven K. Reviczky will be among the featured panelists at the October 27, 2012, League of Women Voters of Connecticut Education Fund's fall conference, From Land and Sea: Food for the Good of Connecticut. The conference will showcase the role food plays in the economy and health of Connecticut.

The panel will highlight how food production in Connecticut can benefit the economy, improve nutrition in the home and on the job, and increase accessibility to state-produced, nutritious foods for all, including those in urban areas and/or with low incomes. A Q&A session will follow.

The conference will also feature presentations by winners of a competition for Connecticut Agricultural Science and Technology Center students to propose innovative ways to meet the goal of improving the state's economy as it relates to food production.

The event is open to the public and will be held at the Agriscience and Biotechnology Center in Trumbull from 9:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. $10 for students; $15 general admission ($20 after October 22 or at the door); $35 for supporters. To register, go to http://www.lwvct.org/events.html, or send a check payable to the LWVCT Education Fund to the League of Women Voters of Connecticut, 1890 Dixwell Avenue, Suite 203, Hamden, CT 06514-

For additional information, call 203-288-7996. Agricultural and food related groups wishing to have an exhibit or booth should contact Christine Lodewick, LWVCT Program Co-Chair at (203) 431-0147 or plodewick@aol.com.

The League of Women Voters is a nonpartisan political organization of women and men, encouraging informed and active participation in government, and working to increase understanding of major public policy issues and influence public policy through education and advocacy.

EXPORTING SEMINAR TO BE OFFERED NOV 28

A free seminar on exporting will be held Wednesday, November 28, 2012, from 8:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., at Bryant University in Providence, RI.

Join Food Export USA Northeast and program partners to learn about the benefits of exporting and the services available to assist with the process. Topics will include the benefits of exporting, why now is a good time to export, financial assistance to make exports happen, and support available to companies looking to export.

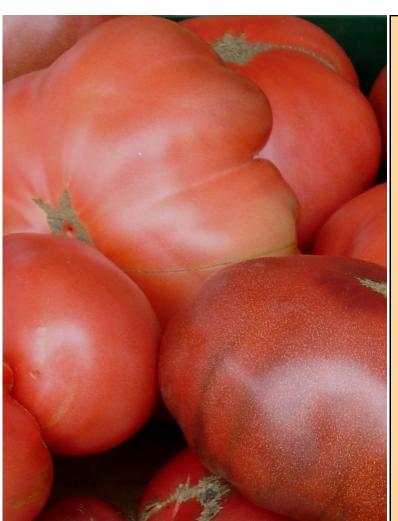

For more information and to register visit www.foodexport.org and click on "Programs and Services," then on "Webinars and Seminars."
