NOTES from the DEPARTMENT.

ESTABLISHING THE FARM LINK PROGRAM

by Jane Slupecki,
Director of the FarmLink Program
In 2006, the Connecticut Department of Agriculture established the FarmLink Program. The goal of the program is to connect farmer seekers with farm owners with agricultural land for rent or for sale. The program also disseminates information on leasing and farm transfer

According to the US Department of Agriculture, Connecticut is losing farmland at one of the fastest rates in the country. Preserving farmland is by far the most effective way of providing a method for stabilizing regional food security for America. However, FarmLink also has a place at the table, as it finds and helps to get other landowners interested in putting their idle land back into production. The trend across America sadly points out there are twice as many people looking for land, as there are parcels for lease or for sale in similar land link programs.

Why and how did Connecticut's FarmLink start? Connecticut grassroots groups wrote and fought to pass Connecticut legislation, known as the Community Investment Act, Public Act 05-228. It sets aside funds for many agricultural programs: farmland preservation, farm-to-school, farm-to-institution — and a funded FarmLink Program. (please see http://www.cga.ct.gov/ for full text)

This program was about 15 years in the works. Grassroots groups had gathered a lot of information. After this information was reviewed, nearly every U.S. land link site was visited. Lots of program directors were contacted. We focused on programs that mirrored Connecticut's law, and used them as the template to build our program. The program was literally built to fit the statute, which mapped out a structure to help farmers and farm seekers make it through the transition of old farm owner to new farm owner.

The logo and website was a top priority. We partnered with UConn's College of Agriculture Communications and Information Technology (CIT) office. Research continued to develop website pages that answered the statute's call for an educational hub, juggling the paperwork, negotiations, quotations and agreements between the Department of Agriculture, the University and our business office in the CT Department of Administrative Services. Rough applications were reviewed by marketing, regulation, farmland preservation, the Commissioner's Office, and some outside partners for good measure, adjusting the applications along the way. Shortly after our group meeting, a website went live January 2007 (please visit www.farmlink.uconn.edu)

In essence, the FarmLink program listings serve as a sort of matchmaking website for prospective farm owners and farm seekers. Interested parties register by completing either a Farm Seeker Application or Farm Owner Application. The description of an available farm or an individual's needs for farmland is then posted on the website. Then, participating farm owners or seekers can call or write, and we send out the full application to help with the "match."

The phone started to ring the day the site went up and has not stopped. This is not just about swaps. Most calls are questions about three topics: starting a farm in Connecticut; how to value and lease land; and, how to list land that the owner wants to see used as farmland. Typically, each quarter, the FarmLink receives about 60 phone calls inquiring about the program.

There are presently 100 farm seekers and 47 farm owners in the Program. We have all types, shapes and sizes of farms, from 3 acres or less to 650 acres. We are now listing preserved farms and town-owned farms, welcomed additions to the Program. There have been over 3000 acres listed since FarmLink's inception. We have four matches under our belt. Good things take time.

To encourage participation, we distribute notices about the program, send applications to state stakeholders, like town halls, town planners, commodity groups, agricultural associations, federal agencies, and UConn Cooperative Extension System. I try not to turn down any opportunities to speak about the program, and am hopeful about some newer ideas bubbling up around FarmLink to help towns that are purchasing farmland.

I am grateful to Connecticut's agriculture community for their support of the FarmLink Program. My advice for FarmLink participants — never turn away advice, learn as we did, plodding into the unknown, unfettered by any old mindsets, preconceived notions or old habits. Everything should be new and fresh. It also helps to be persistent and ask too many questions—ask for help from anyone that is willing to give it to you. Never give up. This simple clearinghouse for information for preparing for the transition between generations of farmers has the simple goal of keeping farmland in production. And we will do our best to help you succeed, because farmland is irreplaceable. And we need our farmers in Connecticut to survive. Our food security depends upon it.

Southern New England Agritourism Business Conference Take Your Farm Destination to the Next Level

Wednesday, March 3, 2010 Gouveia Vineyards, Wallingford, CT Recently, more than 230 farmers in southern New England completed a survey to identify their agritourism training needs. In response to this, New England FarmWays invites farmers to beautiful Gouveia Vineyards (www.gouveiavineyards.com) in Wallingford CT for a special day designed to help launch or grow more profitable farm destinations. Along with their partners, the CT Dept of Agriculture (www.ct-grown.gov) and VisitNewEngland.com (www.VisitNewEngland.com), New England FarmWays will show you how together they're building a hub for training, technical assistance and marketing support to showcase southern New England's destination farms to visitors from near and far.

2010 AG DAY AT THE CAPITOL

The Connecticut Agriculture and Natural Resources Association (CAN-RA) and the Connecticut Department of Agriculture are once again sponsoring Connecticut Ag Day at the Capitol. The event is scheduled for Thursday, March 18, 2010 (please note the event will be held on a Thursday this year!!) in the North Lobby of the Capitol from 10:00am to 1:00pm.

Your association is invited to attend the Ag Day festivities. The chance to meet and talk with Connecticut legislators about the importance of agriculture to Connecticut and its economy is often limited – so please take this wonderful opportunity to do so! Contact your membership and ask them to contact legislators to encourage them to attend the day's festivities.

Organizations are encouraged to put together a dynamic and interactive booth, explaining your organization's mission and significance to Connecticut agriculture. We ask that your booth is manned at all times. Handouts and samples are greatly encouraged!

Legislator bags with agricultural product and information will again be distributed to each legislator. If you have a product you wish to include in the bags, please mention in the returned form - 250 items (please note this is an increase from 200 in previous years) will be needed and can be delivered on Ag Day.

We hope you will join us! Applications along with payment must be submitted by February 17, 2010. For participating in Ag Day, we ask everyone to pay $75 to help defray costs. Contact Jaime Smith at 860-713-2559 or email jaime.smith@ct.gov. Thanks, we look forward to seeing you!!

GOOD NEWS FOR ORGANIC GROWERS OR THOSE TRANSITIONING TO ORGANIC PRODUCTION

Are you transitioning to organic production, or are you already certified as an organic producer? If so, the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) in Connecticut has over $310,000 available for funding this year.

Connecticut State Conservationist Douglas L. Zehner has announced that the agency has received more than $310,000 for the initiative to encourage more organic agricultural production. Funding is being made available as part of the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP). This is the second year for this initiative. (Approximately $248,000 was obligated statewide through this initiative in FY2009.)

"The 2008 Farm Bill provided funding specifically to help organic farmers and those agricultural producers transitioning to organic farming," said Zehner. "This initiative will help make organic food producers eligible to compete for EQIP funds."

Successful applicants will receive funding to implement priority conservation practices designed to improve natural resource conditions. Not only do these practices offer significant environmental benefits, they are also important to growers. Practices include crop rotation, cover crop, nutrient management, pest management, and prescribed grazing.

Applications will be accepted under this initiative until March 12, 2010; they will be ranked at that time. If you are a certified organic producer, you must submit an Organic System Plan (OSP) at the time of application, along with proof of farm ownership. If you are a producer in transition to organic farming, you must provide proof of farm ownership and written, self-certification agreeing to develop an OSP and implement conservation practices consistent with EQIP statute and the OSP.

Note that applications are always accepted for this and any other NRCS program; however, only applications received by March 12, 2010, will be considered for this year's funding.

Interested producers should visit their nearest USDA Service Center (listed below) to determine eligibility. Additional information on the EQIP Organic Initiative is available at www.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/egip/.
